VOL. 14, NUMBER 75 MONESSEN, PA, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1915 SIX CENTS THE WEEK

DOUGLAS GUILTY OF FIRST DEGREE MURDER

Charles Douglas, aged 35, is guilty of murder in the first degree. The penalty is death in the electric chair.

The jury found from the evidence unfolded during the trial that Joseph Smith, an aged Monessen resident, was shot to death by Douglas on the night of June 20.

The jury who had the fate of the negro in their hands, retired to their rooms following the charge by Judge William Ruppel, of Somerset. The 12 jurors were in their room but a half hour. The tipstave was summoned and the foreman of the jury announced that they had agreed on a verdict. The announcement was made to the judge and the prisoner was ordered to be brought from the jail. He was led in with a smile on his face, apparently unconcerned as to what fate was in store for him.

The court room was crowded, a strange stillness seemed to hang over the room. Faint hearts beat fast. The door from the jury room to the court room was swung open. The 12 jurymen filed in . Spectators in the rear of the room tiptoed over the heads of others to catch a glimpse of the jurors and the prisoner. Assistant Clerk of Courts Curtis Foight arose and addressed the foreman of the jury. "'Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed on a verdict?" The jury in clear voices replied "We have." "Who shall speak for you?" asked the clerk? "Our foreman," replied the twelve jurors in unison.

The clerk then addressed the foreman, "How say you, do you find the defendant guilty or not guilty?" The foreman replied: "We find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree."

When Douglas heard the words drop from the mouth of the foreman of the jury, he never moved. He showed no trace of emotion or fright In several moments a smile came over his face. He remarked "that he was game and smiled at death."

It was the coat that Douglas wore on the night of the murder that convicted him. The evidence was mostly circumstantial and a most diffcult case for the Commonwealth. A coat that Douglas is said to have worn the night of the murder, and which he lost in his quick getaway, was found near the scene of the murder the next morning. It was the only clue that the officers had to work on.

Mrs. Smith, the widow of the aged man who was slain, told of how she had picked up an old ax and hit the negro on the back as he went to shoot her husband. The coat was examined and found to contain a cut in the back. In the court room the negro was asked by District Attorney Ward Eicher to put the coat on. The negro put the coat on. He was ordered to take it off again and he was stripped bare to the waist. A large ugly wound, not yet healed, could be seen on his back. The coat was again tried on. The cut in the coat fitted perfectly over the wound in his back. It was circumstantial evidence of the most damaging kind. It bore out the old woman's story. She had cut him on the back. The coat with the slash in it and the wound in the back of the negro formed a chain of evidence that convicted Charles Douglas.

On the morning of June 20, the negro appeared at the home of the aged Smiths near Monessen. He forced entrance to their little hut and demanded money. Mr. Smith picked up an old club and went to strike the negro. The old man was knocked to the floor, and then it is said that the negro fired two shots at him, death coming almost instantly. As the intruder went to shoot the old man, the aged wife picked up an ax and hit him on the back. The assailant then knocked the old woman to the floor and fled.

After a man hunt which lasted a month, the negro was arrested in West Virginia and brought to the jail by Sergeant McLaughlin of the State Police.

New Solicitor Appointed by Commissioners

The County Commissioners have appointed former District Attorney William T. Dom to fill the office of county solicitor to succeed the late Denna C. Ogden. This was a commendable act on the part of the board to recognize a nephew of the deceased and a man thoroughly competent to perform the duties Mr. Dom and Mr. Ogden aside from being blood relation, have been closely identified with each other in the practice of law, and the appointment made by the commissioners should receive universal endorsement throughout the county.

CANNOT ACCOUNT FOR MURDER

John Chinko, the foreigner whose body was found on the Jenkins farm, near Donora, is supposed to have been killed to avenge an attack he is supposed to have made upon a fellow workman, Mike Holman. An argument over the European war is said to have been the cause of trouble between Chinko and Holman and Chinko is said to have struck Holman a blow over the head. The trouble occurred at the Page mill and Chinko after the assault, made his way out of the mill and across the river and was not seen until his dead body was found.

When found there was a bullet hole near the left eye and the man had probably been dead several hours. He was found by a small boy who made the statement that some man was taking a long sleep under a tree and this report led to an investigation on the part of Stanley Pascivitz, who removed a shoe box from the man's face to discover that he was dead.

Chinko boarded at 62 Twelfth street, Donora, and had not been back to the house since leaving Tuesday morning, but he was seen later. The assault is supposed to have been committed Tuesday evening and the shooting some time later. An investigation is being made by Washington county officials and several arrests are supposed to follow.

Holman, the victim of Chinko's blows, is able to be about the streets. His wound did not terminate serious and the physician has discharged him.

IMPROVING

Chief John Wheatley had a very narrow escape from serious injury when his self acting revolver was discharged, sending a bullet between two of his toes. The Chief was sitting in his office cleaning his gun and had it pointed toward the floor when it was accidentally discharged, and the bullet went whizzing downward and badly pealed two toes as it passed on its way.

Physicians were summoned and the injuries dressed and the chief was dispatched to his home in Reed avenue where he has since been. It is stated he will be able to be about in a few days.

Lukarikas Case Was Called Today

The trial of Peter Lukarikas for arson was called in Greensburg today and many local witnesses were subpoenaed to testify. It was supposed to have come up yesterday, but was delayed on account of the Douglas murder trial.

Lukaraki is a well known young foreign resident and for a time held a position with the Monessen Savings and Trust company, but later he went to Brownsville, where he purchased a pool room. On the night of April 20, his home on Park Way took fire and was partially destroyed, together with his household articles. The house was the property of C. S. Pore and was in the hands of the agency of Shuster and Reed.

So suspicious were the circumstances surrounding the fire that the state Deputy Fire Marshall was summoned to collect evidence and later Lukarakis was arrested. Unable to give bail he was taken to Greensburg and lodged in jail. The prosecution claim they have sufficient circumstantial evidence to convict the man.

BOLD ROBBERY COMMITTED LAST NIGHT

At 1:30 o'clock this morning the office of the Pittsburgh Railways company at Washington, Pa., was robbed by two bold men and $500 in cash was secured from the counter of the agent, Mr. Charles Seibert.

Seibert was in the act of counting his money after the last car arrived from Pittsburgh. The money was on the counter when two men who had been loitering about the building all day entered and covered Seibert with revolvers and commanded him to hold up his hands. He obeyed the command and was seized by one of the men and thrown to the floor and sandbagged, while the other got hold of the money. Both men immediately escaped out into the street. Seibert jumped to his feet, grabbed a gun and ran after the men, firing shots at them as they passed into an alley. The town was soon aroused and the officers were on the trail of the men, but they have not yet been apprehended.

The office which was robbed, was located in the heart of Washington, directly opposite the court house and jail. At midnight both the men were in the station and were asked by Seibert what they wanted and they replied that they were waiting for the last car to arrive. They waited until he was in the act of counting the money which was his custom before closing, and made a clear sweep of everything. Police in all the surrounding towns have been notified to assist in apprehending the men.

Should be Regulated

Partisanship may be a legitimate adhesion to party, or it may simply be an association for selfish ends This latter partisanship may become the bane of national existence, as it is organized to prate of principle while it is grabbing the spoils As one writer puts it, such partisans are "bound together by the cohesive power of public plunder." This perverted partisanship bends its greatest efforts to the control of political situations through organizations masking under the name of social or moral associations. Under a plea of morality, or reform, they seek to gain office or power, regardless of the greater good of the state or the nation. The methods of such partisans may be distinguished easily They are always the same—pledges from candidates, falsehood, treachery, the denial of obligations and corruption of officials either through threats of defeat or promise of favors Frequently the efforts of such partisans are inspired by zeal, but zeal in a bad cause may be even a greater evil than that which the zealot would try to remedy. Reform in itself may be desirable, but if the consequences of that reform are worse than the evil reformed, nothing is gained and progress is hindered. Partisanship should be regulated by common sense and knowledge

The Ideal Life

"Farm life is an ideal lie," says Zim, in Cartoon's magazine, "especially in the story books and upon the theatre stage. The farmer is his own boss and monarch of all the acres that are not plastered with mortgages He arises with the little birds, hits up the hard cider in the cellar, then hies him thither to toy with the cattle, for milking at 4 a m. is one of the joys of the farm life From the milking stool he wends his way to the woodpile and gleefully chops up a cord or two before the breakfast call. When the morning meal is over, his real life begins. Blended with the buzz of rusty machinery, song and profanity, the remaining eighteen hours are whiled away When the farm becomes so impoverished that it will raise nothing but chin whiskers, he lets the mortgage holder do his worst."

Couldn't Convict Them

The governor of Georgia says he will "at the proper time" offer rewards for the evidence under which the slayers and torturers of Leo Frank shall be arrested and convicted. This offer, whether genuine or not, will be a fake reward

Gov Harris knows that no man who knows the guilty parties—and there are hundreds of them—would dare, for fear of his life—to tell what he knows If an angel of heaven should bring into court the books of the recording angel, certified by God Almighty himself, no Georgia jury would accept the evidence The parties charged might come into court with their hands dripping with the blood from Frank's torn throat, and still the juries would free the murderers The trouble lies in the social ideals of the state

One of the most notable features of the re-opening of the public schools in the United States this week is a lessening of the increased enrollment The falling off of immigration during the past year has had its effect. Each year the enrollment has had its steady increases, and this year the enrollment is, of course, increased But the flock of immigrant children fresh from Europe is lacking In some sections this is not noticeable, but in the mill cities of the Eastern states, it has a noticeable effect on enrollment The foreign children are not lacking, however, and the problem, of putting American ideals and education into these dusky little strangers from over the seas is still the burden of the educator in industrial centers.

The Result of a Caprice

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

"Auntie, why were you never married? I have heard that in your youth you were a great belle."

"My dear," replied the old lady, "why I was not married is a painful story to me. It has been constantly with me ever since I was nineteen years old, but I have never talked about it. There is a lesson in it for young girls like you, and on that account I will tell it to you."

Then the old lady told me the following story

You know that I was born and raised in the south on one of those plantations that represented typical high life there before the war destroyed the institution which was its foundation. I came of age shortly before the struggle opened I suppose it is true that I was a belle Would that I had not been such, for the attention I received turned my head and caused what embittered my life.

Among my suitors were Alfred Beale and Edgar Turnlee. Turnlee was my favorite—indeed, I was very much in love with him—but I wished to be striven for and alternately encouraged him and his rival, Alfred Beale. One day I was sitting in the drawing room of the plantation house with Edgar My back as well as his was toward the door opening into the great hall, while my face was toward a large mirror resting on the mantel over the fireplace. I caught a glimpse of the reflection of Alfred Beale in the hall

He saw both Edgar and me sitting together. He paused and looked at us making no sound to indicate to us that he was there. Indeed, he was eaves dropping, but I thought little of that I was wrapt in the idea of being an object of strife between two young men and was tempted to see what would happen between them should I purposely increase their antagonism

I had been expecting a proposal from Edgar and now gave him every encouragement. He was placing an arm around my waist and his face was near mine when I gave a little shriek and drew away from him, assuming to be indignant. Beale stepped into the room and, glaring at Edgar, upbraided him Edgar looked an appeal to me to exonerate him

It is impossible to give reasons for the freaks that enter the heads of young persons, especially young girls, in the matter of coquetry. Instead of taking the blame of Edgar's act upon myself, I walked out of the room, leaving my admirers to settle the controversy in their own way I had no sooner left them than it occurred to me that I had acted abominably. If I had gone directly back and confessed the situation might have been saved. I was about to do so when I remembered that such an acknowledgment would bring down upon me the contempt of both men—that is, if it were believed which I doubted.

While I was deliberating I heard both men go out of the house. I started to call them back, but hesitated, and before I had made up my mind what to do they were out of hearing.

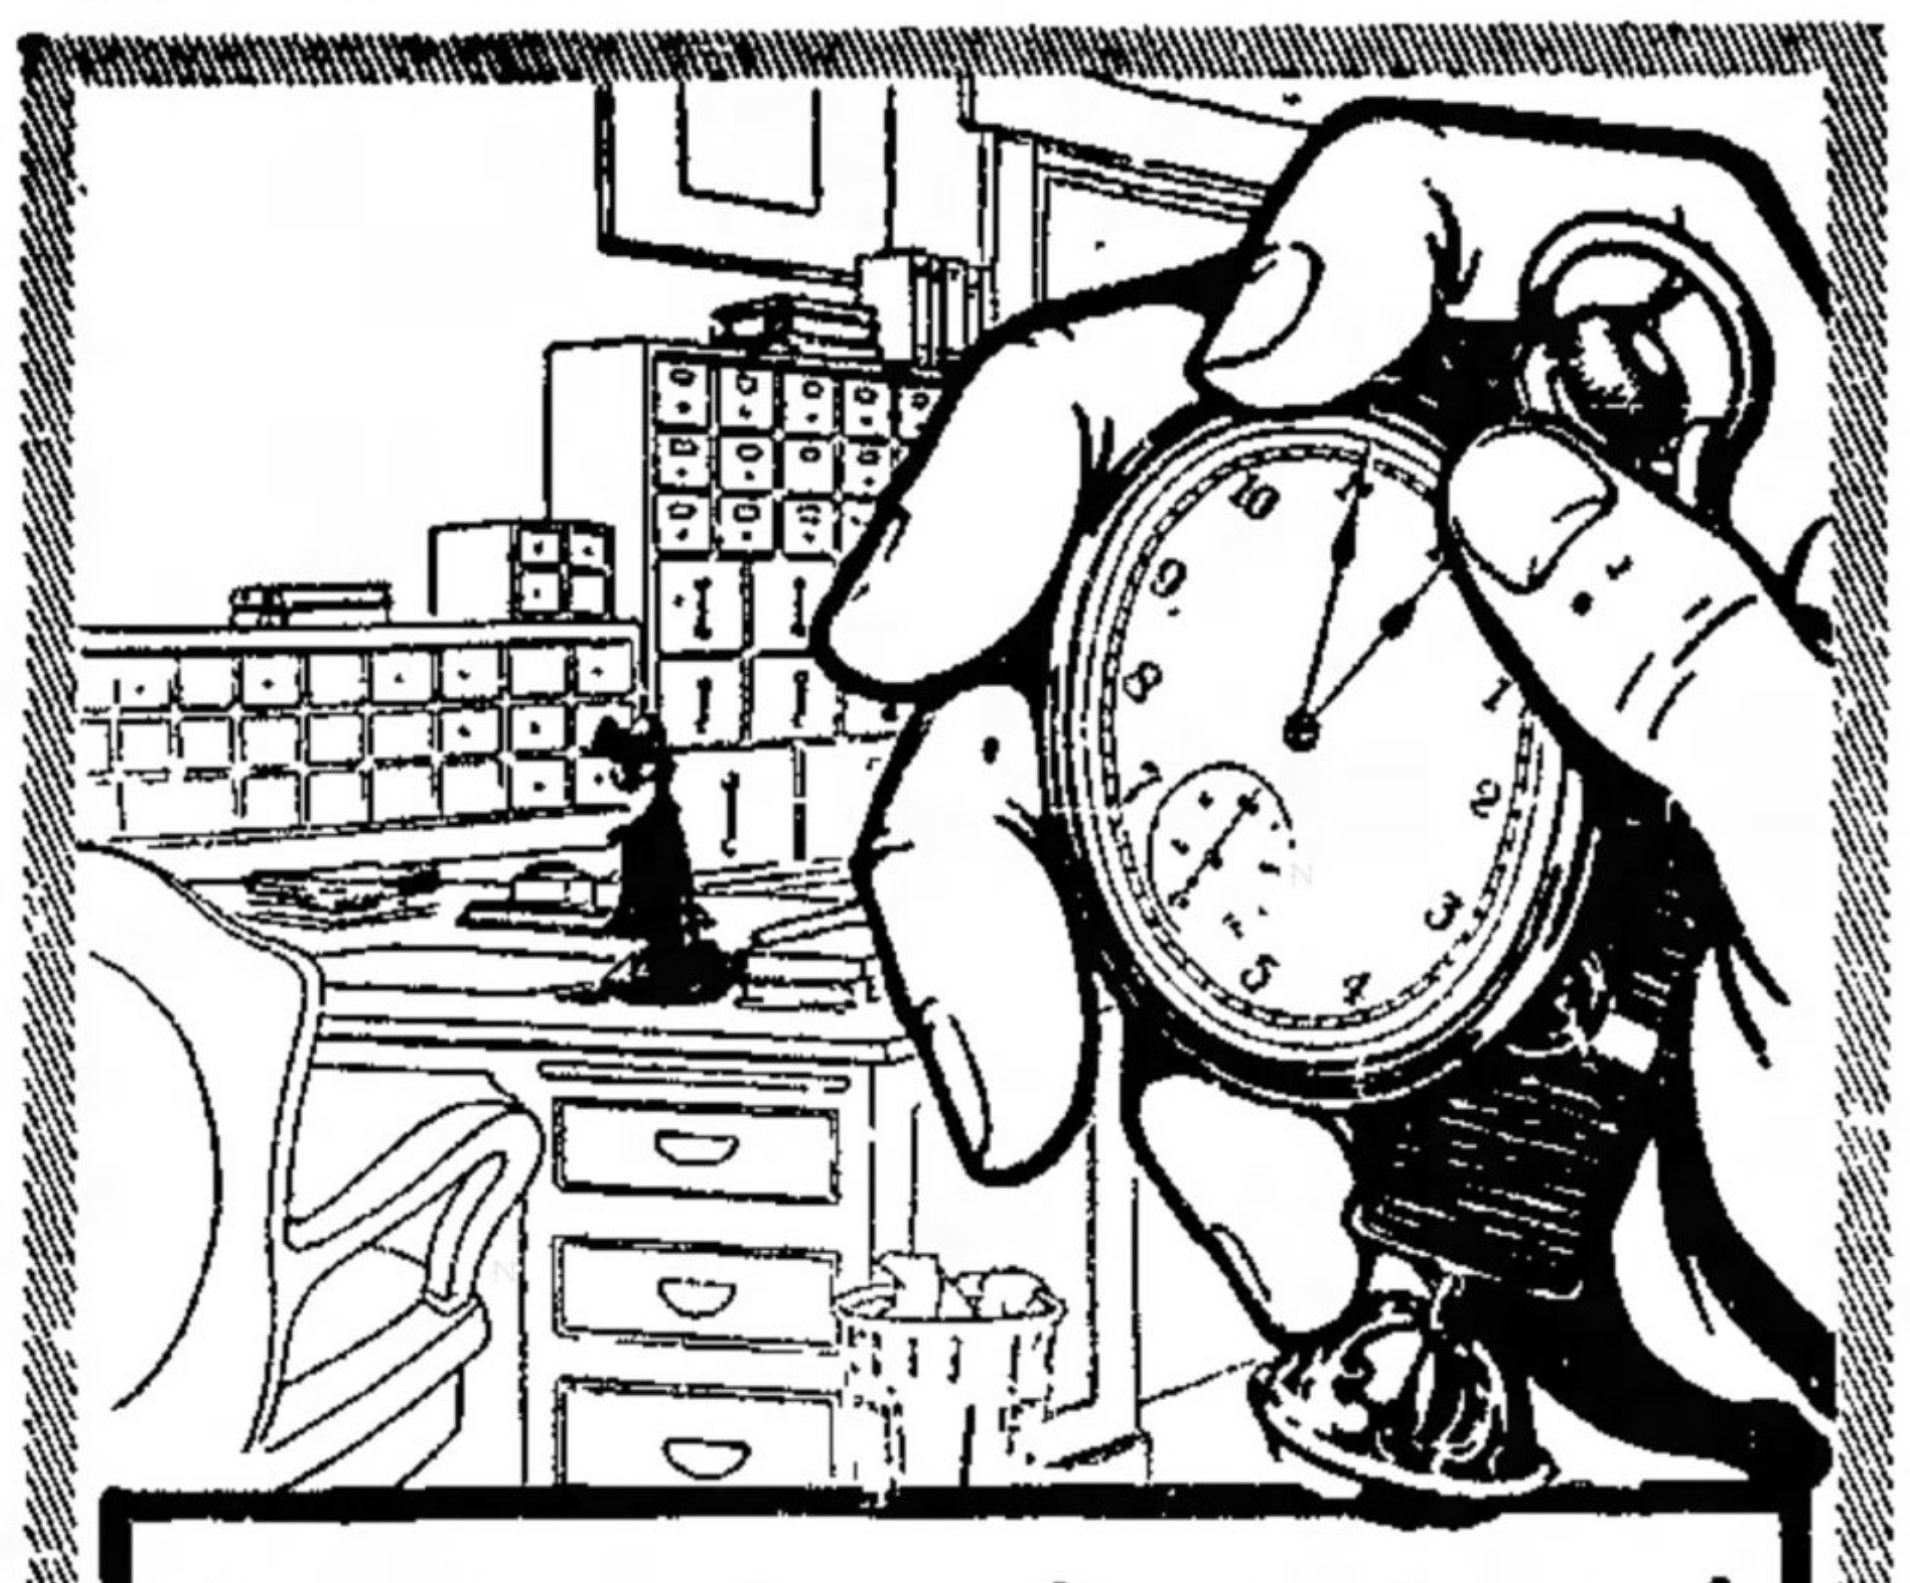
I wondered what would come to pass between them. It did not occur to me that they would fight a duel. Dueling by this time had largely died out in the south, and I was too young to have heard much of an obsolete custom. What chiefly concerned me was that I had so deeply wronged the man I loved. I was not only suffering from consciousness of having done him an injustice, but was panic stricken lest he should never forgive me.

The affair began in the afternoon, and from then until bedtime I was in a state of dread, not that anything serious might occur between the rivals, but that I had lost my lover. In the middle of the night my father came into my room and asked me for an explanation of what had happened, for he had heard of it. Instead of telling him the truth, I left him with the impression that Edgar had transcended his rights and Alfred had resented his act. I asked father what had come of it, and he replied that I would learn the result in the morning; then he left me

This was the first intimation I had of anything serious between the two men. Suddenly it flashed upon me that they would fight. I trembled I lay turning the matter over in my brain, which was like a boiling caldron. With the first light of dawn I arose, dressed myself, stole down the great staircase and out on to the veranda. Looking out from behind a vine, I saw Edgar and two other young men riding by the plantation. Going to the barn, I saddled my horse, mounted and followed them.

I cannot dwell on the rest. It is too painful I was some time in finding where they had gone. When I reached them they had fought a duel with pistols, and Alfred Beale was lying on the ground, while a surgeon was bending over him I hurried to him to see if he were dead and was assured that his wound would not be fatal. I turned to Edgar. He gave me a look that has haunted me ever since. I saw in it that I had lost him forever.

You have heard my story. May it be a lesson to you that love is not a game for passing the time that young persons regard it. Love is a serious matter and should be treated seriously. Better the European method of matches made by parents than the follies committed by some young men and women when left to their own caprices.



Improve those five minutes!

Pull out the "prospect list," grab your Bell Telephone and say that final word to some hesitating buyer on your next month's route. Better still, set aside an hour or two a day for selling by telephone.

Many a twenty or thirty cent toll call has put an order of twenty or thirty or a hundred dollars on the books for the men who crowd into each spare minute just as much of good, hard telephone-sales talk as it will hold.

Make the minutes golden,
— by Bell Telephone.

Big Show Will Be in Charleroi

The Barnum & Bailey Greatest show on earth will exhibit in Charleroi on Wednesday, Sep 22 and an arenic entertainment of more than unusual interest may be anticipated with confidence The character of the performance is indicated by the comments of the press, which has been unanimous in declaring that all previous records of magnitude and novelty have been surpased this year.

Although it is announced a few of last season's most notable acts have been retained the performance is in the main a new one, and many feature acts, never before presented in this country, are given prominence in the very comprehensive program

Among this season's most notable announcements are a gorgeous spectacular pageant, telling the story of the [illegible] ture of Lalla Rookh from the Royal Gardens of Delhi, Fallenbarg's wonder bears, beautiful posing horses and statue women [illegible] group of ten performing [illegible] the six Riding Hanneford [illegible] Millman Troupe, the ten Seigrist Silbons in a novel, high [illegible] a great circus company of [illegible] European and American [illegible] out the latest achievement [illegible] ing, acrobatic and aerial da[illegible] eral troupes of remarkably trained horses; an exciting battle scene, presented by the war elephants and introduced by lady trainers, presented by the central group of the three great herds of elephants; an entirely new hippodrome, with genuine Kentucky racing stock and jockeys of international reputation, and a largely augmented Zoo of rare wild beasts.

The result of the show's foreign service is especially noticeable this year More novel features than have been seen in a single entertainment crowd each other in the program.

He Wants Penrose For President

Charles H. Dorfinger, a Wayne county glass manufacturer, has announced his candidacy for delegate to the next Republican National convention, and gave notice that he would vote for Senator Boies Penrose for the Presidency in the event of his election He will avail himself, he says of the right to have his presidential preferences printed after his name on the primary election ballot next spring. He was a delegate to the National convention of 1915 In a statement issued by Dorfinger, he says that Penrose best typifies the Pennsylvania idea of a high protective tariff.

Friends of Penrose refuse to admit that he will be a candidate for the Presidency with the idea of securing control of the Pennsylvania delegation. They admit there may be a contest between the Republican organization and Governor Martin G. Brumbaugh, in the event that the Governor should show signs of Presidential aspirations, or of announcing his candidacy with the idea of securing control of the Republican state organization in a fight for National delegates, though the part the Governor played in the selection of Thomas B. Smith as the "harmony" candidate for mayor of Philadelphia is held to indicate that there will be no serious row between the executive and the present leader.
